Jonathan DeLura

Jonathan is a recent master's graduate in City and Regional Planning and a current master's student in Public Informatics at the Rutgers University Bloustein School of Planning and Public Policy. He began work as a full-time research specialist for the New Jersey Agricultural Experiment Station's Office of Research Analytics in the Fall of 2023, focusing on the geospatial impacts of climate change. With experience in data analysis, data visualization, sustainable agriculture, and education, he is passionate about environmentally sustainable and socially just planning and policy informed and driven by data and technology and committed to assisting governments, communities, and various stakeholders prepare for, mitigate, and adapt to climate change while ensuring justice for their most vulnerable populations.